SPRINGHOUSE DERMATOLOGY AND AESTHETICS
 DERMATOLOGIST

Dr. Margo Weishar of Springhouse Dermatology and Aesthetics became a cosmetic dermatologist to put years of rigorous science in service of how people feel about themselves. “Understanding laser physics, skin biology, and the precise use of injectables — that depth is what allows me to deliver results that are genuinely transformative, not merely trendy,” she says.

After decades in this field, she has watched “revolutionary” treatments vanish as quickly as they arrived. “My approach: what’s proven? What has rigorous science behind it? What has helped real patients over many years? When something genuinely earns its place, I adopt it. Shiny objects rarely do.” Dr. Weishar also believes that social media is a firehose of aesthetic misinformation — and anyone can hold the hose. “I don’t follow trends, and I’m not swayed by them,” she adds. “Every recommendation I make is grounded in solid, peer-reviewed science. That may sound boring. In medicine, boring is often exactly right.”

Before summer heat arrives, Dr. Weishar recommends a laser treatment that stimulates new collagen, erases sun damage, and corrects sallowness, dark spots, and uneven tone. “Renewal isn’t just for the garden,” she says.

To create results that feel fresh and natural, Springhouse Dermatology and Aesthetics starts with a 360-degree evaluation — “because we’re not locked into one answer,” says Dr. Weishar. Overfilling faces is yesterday’s mistake, she continues. “Instead, we combine twenty lasers and devices, physician-grade skincare tailored to each patient’s dermatologic needs, and judicious use of toxin and filler. The result follows patients gracefully through decades.”

“The comment I treasure most is ‘I look like myself again,’” says Dr. Weishar. “Aging is a slow estrangement — you glance in the mirror and the face feels unfamiliar. My goal is restoring that recognition: this is me, the way I like myself to look. That’s not vanity. That’s well-being.”
